SECTION A: READING COMPREHENSION

Read the following short story and answer the following questions.

“Elephants taking a mud bath”

Elephants live together in big families. Elephant families have females of all ages, but only young males.

When the sons (male children) are about twenty years old, they leave the family. Daughters (female children) stay with the family for live. They help to look after the new babies. The leader of the family is the oldest female.

When young males leave their mother’s family, they stay alone with a few other males. So, small groups of elephants are usually all males. Adult (grown-up, not a child) males, called bull elephants, join a female herd (a group of animals) for only a shorter time to mate (come together to make new babies).

Elephants like to have mud baths. This stops their skin from getting dry. Mud also keeps them cool in the hot sun. Elephants can live up to a hundred years.
